C.2 BACKGROUND

C.2.1 The Office of the Chief Technology Officer (OCTO) is responsible for the management of District of Columbia Government's data processing services. ODC1 and ODC2 are located at 3919 Benning Road NE, Washington, D.C., 20019 and 222 Massachusetts Ave NW, Washington DC., 20001, respectively. OCTO employs an IBM Z800 Server at each Data Center. OCTO plans to modernize its servers and thereby avoid the cost of obsolescence, enable granular upgrades in capacity, and ensure that it can exploit future mainframe functionality. OCTO shall accomplish this modernization by trading in the currently installed IBM z800 processing complexes and purchasing of two (2) new, factory-delivered, IBM z9 Business Class Servers.

OCTO's currently installed IBM z800 processors are nearly six years old (three-generations behind the current technology) and near their effective end-of-life. The latest IBM z9 BC processors provide additional capacity at more granular increments. This shall enable OCTO to purchase only the additional capacity required to meet the processing needs of the District of Columbia Government and thereby produce significant savings in software costs during a capacity upgrade. The new z9 also includes optional features such as zIIP, ICF and IFL which are specialized processors that provide ways of reducing software cost by offloading workload from the generalized processors. In addition, the z9 offers another method of software cost savings. It offers the ability to dial down the capacity until it is required, thus savings on software cost that is capacity based. These features coupled with the new software pricing offering from IBM shall lower the cost of ownership over time. An additional feature available with the new z9 server (FICON) supports faster I/O that shall result in improve I/O response time. Mean Time to Failure (MTF) is now approximately 40 years for the new z9 series processors.
